

Insights from Polish–Tanzanian research collaboration

This book wishes to present the power of international scientific cooperation, bridging the Institute of Political Science at the University of Warmia and Mazury in Olsztyn, Poland, and the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences at the Mkwawa University College of Education in Iringa, Tanzania. This cross-continental partnership underscores the global significance of the issues at hand, offering readers a comprehensive exploration of sustainable development within an African context.

The Authors represent a variety of research backgrounds: from seasoned scholars to young PhD candidates and postgraduates, each contributing their unique insights and research findings. They represent a diverse set of disciplines and fields— primarily from the humanities and social sciences—which gives the book a dynamic and interdisciplinary character. This not only enriches the discussion but also aligns with the complex challenges facing contemporary science and society.

Divided into four thematic areas—literature, education, religion, and politics—this book offers an in-depth look at their role in shaping the future of Africa. The editors wish to start a global dialogue on the key issues threatening Africa today, challenging readers to ponder the role of change and adaptation in forging pathways to sustainable development.
